

Abstract

Disclosed are methods and systems for constructing a model of transactional object middleware components. The system collects and derives metrics based on events generated by the middleware during operation. Event data are correlated with business model information to provide a real-time, business-based view of transaction throughput in e-commerce and other business-related computing systems.

204020" 222250